

POSITIVE ORGANIZATIONAL BEHAVIOUR

Programme Overview

A lot had been said about dysfunctional behaviors, negative attitudes and unproductive beliefs in the history of organisational behavior so much so that organisational behavior reflects to larger extent negativity at its best and only projects what doesn't work and what needs to be changed. A pioneering attempt to shift the focus of organisations towards a more positive approach has been made by Fred Luthans (2000). The programme on positive organisational behavior encapsulates the virtues of human strengths, positive emotional and cognitive states and the benefit of flourishing workplace relationships in making organisations both lovable and worth working for.
